UT Tyler announces tennis program

The University of Texas at Tyler will establish its first intercollegiate athletics program this fall with the introduction of men's and women's tennis teams, Dr. Tom Turns, the university's dean of student services, announced. Both teams will compete in the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics.

Two world-class tennis performers, Jason Morton and Russell

Seymour, will serve as coaches of the teams. Morton and Seymour were recently appointed pros at Hollytree Country Club.

"UT Tyler is in its second decade, and the university is rapidly expanding its curriculum and enrollment. The time is right to move forward with a quality athletic program," Dr. Turns said.

"Tennis was selected as the institution's first intercollegiate sport for a number of reasons," he added. "First, the university already has tennis courts. Second, tennis is very competitive in Tyler and East Texas, and we are confident UT Tyler's academic program and excellent coaching staff will attract players who will represent Tyler very well. Third, the program will promote a sport in which students may participate for a lifetime."

The two coaches have been playing as doubles partners since 1975 and have won 31 national and international titles. In addition to playing and teaching together, Morton and Seymour have also published a book on Winning Tennis After 40. Morton has also written articles for a number of tennis publications on officiating tennis.

Morton comes to UT Tyler and Hollytree from the University Club at the Galleria in Houston. A graduate of the University of Houston where he has been inducted into the exclusive University of Houston Hall of Honor, he coached the University of Alabama tennis team from 1958-64.

The current holder of three national doubles titles and one world doubles title, Morton is the playing captain of the U.S. Dubler Cup team, the Davis Cup for senior tennis players. He and Seymour were members of the team which defeated Great Britain in 1982 in Athens, Greece.

Seymour, a native of South Africa, has been teaching tennis for 28 years.

Morton and Seymour are currently working on a schedule for 1983-84 and are actively recruiting players for both the men's team and the women's team.

Board approves new graduate programs

A new graduate degree program in public administration and a new graduate major in education have been approved for The University of Texas at Tyler by the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System.

The Master of Science in public planning and administration and the Master of Education in education administration degrees become effective with the 1983-84 academic year at UT Tyler.

"I am extremely pleased that the Coordinating Board has recognized a broader responsibility for UT Tyler. We look forward to additional academic program approvals as we continue to become identified as a comprehensive upper-level and graduate university," Dr. George F. Hamm, UT Tyler president, said in announcing the board action.

The M.S. in public planning and administration degree, under the Department of Social Sciences, is designed for persons in or preparing to enter mid or upper management levels in public and nonprofit organizations.

The program requires 36 semester credit hours, including a core of 21 hours, nine restricted electives and six hours in research skills. A sophisticated research paper is required in this non-thesis program.

The M.Ed. in educational administration, under the School of Education and Psychology, is designed to meet the need for supervisors, coordinators, curriculum directors and principals in area public schools. It provides a Texas Professional Administrator's Certificate to those who hold a Provisional Certificate and have had at least two years of creditable experience in classroom teaching.

The program requires 45 semester credit hours, in compliance with requirements for Placement office offers employment services

Any student or alumnus of The University of Texas at Tyler who is seeking full-time employment is welcome to make use of services available through the UT Tyler Placement Office. The office maintains a job board in the University Center with a list of current vacancies and job opportunities.

"We will set up campus interviews if an employer wants to come and talk with several students during one trip," Jerry Alexander, director of the office, said. "We have a list of students giving information concerning their majors and the type jobs they are interested in. Credential files can be released for employers to look at the references. We try to match people with employees who would work best in their corporation, business or school."

The Placement Office will circulate job opportunity information and literature to the academic department to which it applies. The literature is displayed to the advantage of both students and employers.

The Placement Office offers a career development library that contains a variety of current career and educational materials. These include job interview techniques, information on employment trends, descriptions of career responsibilities, and a Standard and Poor Register of Corporations.

"We invite alumni of the university to participate in the Placement Office services in two ways," Alexander said. "Any member of the UT Tyler Alumni Association who is in the job market is eligible to register with the office and we will provide the same assistance to their files as we do to our current students.

"Also, we encourage any graduate of this university who might be in a position to hire someone to consider using the Placement Office as a source of identifying potential job candidates," Alexander added.

Anyone interested in more information about placement services should contact Alexander in UC 111 at 566-1471, extension 355.

Van Horn exhibits bronze art

The University of Texas at Tyler is presenting an exhibition of bronze art by Donald Van Horn through Sept. 16 in the University Center, room 101.

A reception will be given from 3-5 p.m. Sept. 11. Both the reception and the exhibition are open to the public.

The 14-piece exhibition by the UT Tyler associate professor of art shows birds as a special image.

"Each piece is, in a sense, a paradox — a combination of spontaneous feeling and permanence of form," Dr. William Stephens, Department of Art chairman, said.

Van Horn's feelings "emerge from a reservoir of 'memory images' and seek their form in hard shapes of bronze," Stephens said.

"Two preoccupations are basic to these feelings and provide a thematic coherence. One is a personal sense of isolation which says, 'We have to make this life by ourselves.' The other is a fascination with permanence that knows a true work of art endures after human desire and decay have passed.

"In Don Van Horn's perception, bronze birds are the key images for the flight of feeling and the solidity of permanent form," Stephens said.

Included in the exhibition is Winged Stelea, a kind of "last judgment" in which the birds are lifted up on one side and cast down on the other. Yellow Brick Road, 15 feet long and more than 400 pounds, is a road of bricks leading to the end brick with an emerging bird.

Throughout the exhibition, "the bird is used metaphorically, for this is really man," said Van Horn.

"With dedication I achieve craftsmanship. In bronze, permanence. It will be others who determine the significance," the artist said. "It is the viewer who completes the whole creative process."

Van Horn joined the UT Tyler faculty in 1978. He received the Bachelor of Fine Arts degree from the University of Nebraska and the Master's of Fine Arts degree from the University of Florida.

His works have been in numerous national and regional exhibitions, including the 14th Annual Del Mar National Small Sculpture and Drawings Exhibition in Corpus Christi where he won the top sculpture award. He also has a published monograph, Carved in Wood: Folk Sculpture in the Arkansas Ozarks.

The exhibition is scheduled for the University of North Alabama campus in Florence, Ala. Oct. 5-28.
